Failing one or two BECE core subjects does not remove student from placement – Education Ministry clarifies

The Ministry of Education has clarified that students who fail one or two core subjects in the Basic Education Certificate Examination (BECE) are not automatically disqualified from gaining admission to senior high school.

The Ministry’s spokesperson, Hashmin Mohammed, said there was no government policy that required students to be removed from the placement system solely because they had failed one or two subjects.

“We do not have a policy that says that if you fail one or two course subjects, you should be removed. We do not; such a policy does not exist,” he said. His clarification follows concerns over the more than 55,000 students who failed to secure placement through the Computerised School Selection and Placement System (CSSPS) following the release of the 2026 BECE results. Mr Mohammed explained that the placement system had flagged students who failed one or two core subjects to enable the Ministry to collect data on their academic performance and use the information to guide education policy. He stressed that being flagged by the system should not be interpreted as a final decision to deny such students admission to senior high school.

“We are saying that education, secondary education, is a right, but not a privilege. We need to give them a path,” he said. Alternative Pathways

According to the Ministry, affected students have a number of options available to them, including self-placement into schools with available vacancies or enrolment in a remedial programme. Students and their parents may also opt for the affected candidates to re-sit the BECE. Mr Mohammed said the government was deliberately creating alternative pathways to ensure that students affected by the placement issue were not left without an opportunity to continue their education. “We do not want to throw this group of students into the [streets] because its national security implications are going to be very, very high,” he said. He added that the Ministry would monitor the academic progress of students who continue their education through the alternative pathway, with particular attention to subjects they previously failed. The clarification is expected to allay concerns among parents and candidates who had assumed that being among the students flagged by the CSSPS meant they had been permanently denied admission to senior high school.

Mahama inaugurates five-member Independent Fiscal Council, demands objective oversight

President John Dramani Mahama has inaugurated the 5-member Independent Fiscal Council with a charge to provide independent, credible and objective oversight of Ghana’s fiscal policy.

The Council was inaugurated on Tuesday, September 8, 2026, at a brief ceremony at the Presidency, with the President stressing the importance of its mandate to the government’s ongoing efforts to strengthen the economy.

President Mahama said the Council’s work would be critical to improving investor confidence, promoting inclusive economic growth and job creation, and enhancing the delivery of public services.

“Your responsibility is to scrutinise the Government’s fiscal decisions, assess compliance with established rules, and provide sound recommendations in the national interest,” he said. He said the Council’s role was particularly important at a time when citizens and other stakeholders were demanding greater prudence, transparency and accountability in the management of public resources.

The Council will serve a 4-year term and is chaired by Dr. Emmanuel Oteng Kumah, an international economic consultant and former Board Chairman of Standard Chartered Bank Ghana. Its membership includes Dr. Henry Akpenamawu Kofi Wampah, former Governor of the Bank of Ghana; Professor Patrick Opoku Asuming of the University of Ghana Business School, representing academia; Leslie Dwight Mensah, representing think tanks; and J. Kweku Bedu-Addo, a former public policy expert at the Ministry of Finance.

Mahama Pledges Independence

President Mahama assured the Council that his administration would respect its independence and provide the necessary institutional support to enable it to effectively discharge its responsibilities. He said fiscal discipline should be viewed as a responsibility to both present and future generations rather than merely an obligation imposed by law. “Fiscal responsibility must not be regarded merely as a statutory requirement. It is a moral obligation to present and future generations,” he said. The President further urged members of the Council to approach their work with courage, professionalism and objectivity. “Your work must be guided by evidence and the national interest, without fear, favour, or political consideration,” President Mahama stated. Responding on behalf of the Council, Dr. Wampah assured the President that its members would diligently perform the responsibilities entrusted to them under their mandate.

The Independent Fiscal Council was established under the Public Financial Management (Amendment) Act, 2025 (Act 1136), with the objective of strengthening fiscal discipline, promoting long-term debt sustainability and restoring confidence in Ghana’s public financial management system.

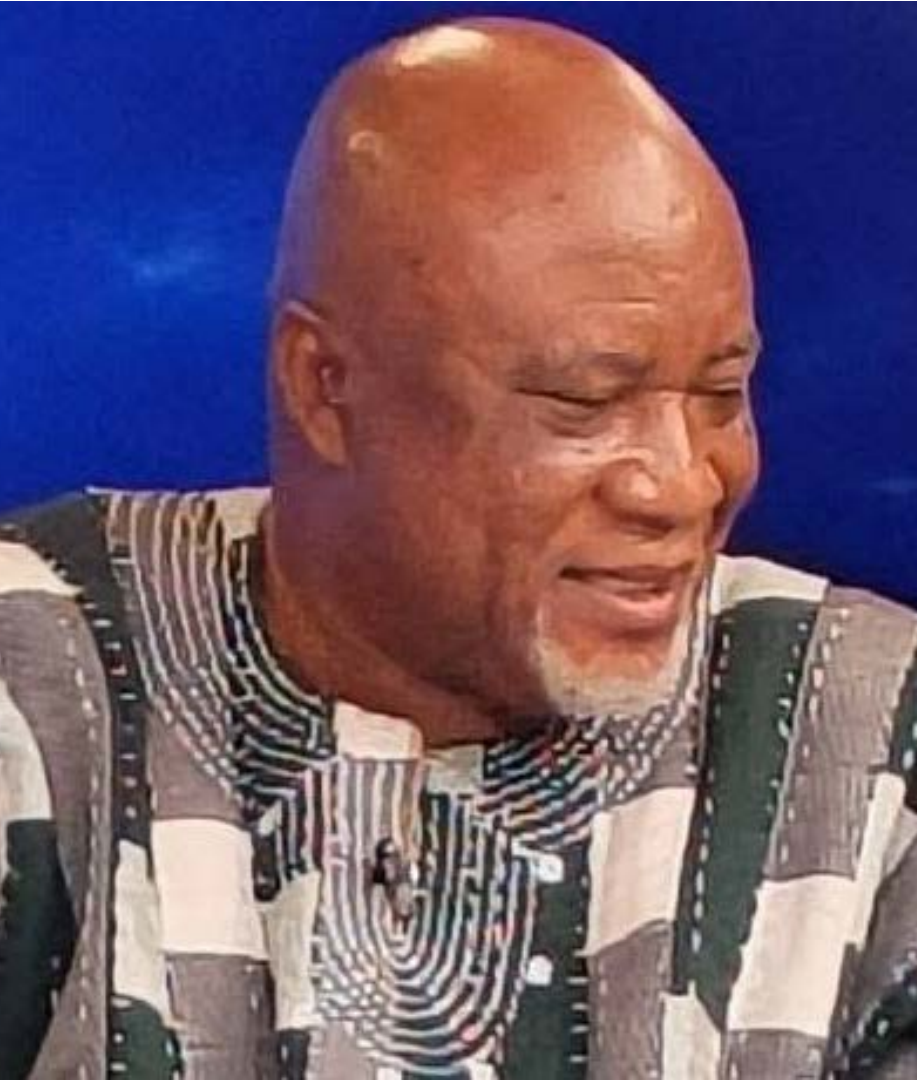

No businessman will sponsor NPP again because of its ‘evil and greedy nature’ – Hopson Adorye

Director of Field Operations for the United Party (UP), Hopson Adorye, has claimed that no businessman will be willing to sponsor the activities of the New Patriotic Party (NPP) because of what he describes as the party’s “evil and greedy mindset.”

According to him, the NPP’s alleged treatment of some of its financial supporters has created a situation where business owners are now reluctant to commit their resources to the party. Speaking on the Citizen Show with Kwabena Bobie Ansah, Mr Adorye alleged that the NPP has contributed to the collapse of businesses belonging to some individuals who previously supported the party. He argued that such experiences have sent a negative signal to other businessmen who may have considered financially supporting the party. Mr Adorye further accused the NPP of failing to protect the interests of individuals and businesses associated with the party, insisting that its alleged actions have resulted in resentment among some of its former supporters. He described the party’s conduct as a reflection of what he called an “evil and greedy nature,” arguing that this would make it difficult for the NPP to attract significant financial backing for its activities and future elections. The United Party executive also claimed that the NPP has “hurt and stepped on the toes” of several individuals through its actions and decisions. He believes these developments have gradually affected the party’s public image and contributed to making it less attractive to some Ghanaians. Mr Adorye maintained that political parties depend heavily on public confidence and support from individuals and businesses, and therefore must be mindful of how they treat their supporters. He further suggested that unless the NPP changes what he described as its approach towards businesses and individuals, the party could face increasing difficulty in securing the financial and grassroots support needed for its political activities. His comments come amid ongoing political discussions over the NPP’s internal challenges, public perception and prospects ahead of future elections.

Poor refereeing destroying Ghana’s football – Mahama

President John Dramani Mahama has expressed concern about the standard of refereeing in Ghana, identifying officiating as a major challenge undermining the development and competitiveness of the country’s football.

He called on the Ghana Referees Association and the Ghana Football Association (GFA) to collaborate to improve officiating and rebuild public confidence in the integrity of domestic matches. “Unfortunately, refereeing is one of the things destroying our football,” he said.

He made the remarks on Tuesday, September 8, 2026, when Nations FC and Medeama SC paid a courtesy call on him at the Jubilee House following their qualification for CAF inter-club competitions.

According to the President, perceptions that some match results are predetermined have contributed to falling attendance at football stadiums, with some supporters becoming increasingly sceptical about the fairness of matches. He stressed the need for every game to be officiated fairly to ensure that victories are determined by performance on the pitch. President Mahama said addressing concerns over refereeing while retaining talented players in the domestic league for longer would help raise the standard of the Ghana Premier League, attract supporters back to the stadiums and restore confidence in Ghanaian football. He has also urged stakeholders in Ghanaian football to find ways of retaining promising local players in the domestic league for longer, warning that the early departure of talented footballers is weakening the quality of the Ghana Premier League. The President said Ghana was losing some of its best emerging talents to foreign clubs shortly after they began attracting attention from scouts, particularly those from Europe. “We are too quick to sell our players. As soon as a player begins to show promise, scouts take him away, mostly to Europe, and that depletes the quality of our local league,” Mahama said. He argued that keeping talented players in Ghana for a longer period would allow them to develop further, gain valuable experience with the national team and mature before making the transition to foreign leagues.

UK stranded Barosky to receive psychological, financial support after evacuation to Ghana

Foreign Affairs Minister Samuel Okudzeto Ablakwa has confirmed the repatriation of musician Barosky to Ghana following his ordeal in Manchester in the United Kingdom.

Barosky’s plight was brought to public attention after he spoke about his difficult circumstances in an interview with OKAY FM’s Nana Romeo, who was in the United Kingdom.

Following the reports, the government intervened to facilitate the musician’s return to Ghana.

In a social media post announcing his repatriation, Mr Ablakwa said the Ministry of Foreign Affairs had fully funded Barosky’s return and was providing additional support to assist him with his reintegration.

He said the support included psychosocial assistance and financial aid as the musician settles back into life in Ghana.

The minister’s post read:

“I can confirm that we have repatriated Barosky and he is safely back with us in Ghana.

As part of our consular mandate, the Foreign Ministry fully sponsored his repatriation to Ghana last night. We are also providing psychosocial support and a reintegration financial assistance.

We are most grateful to our fellow citizens, particularly Nana Romeo, for bringing Barosky’s heart-wrenching plight in Manchester to our attention.

I commend our High Commission in the UK for their impressive coordination.

We strive to leave no Ghanaian behind.

For God and Country.”

Ghana loses over 12,000 lives, US$1.9bn annually to air pollution – EPA

Air pollution causes an estimated 12,870 deaths annually in Ghana and costs the country about US$1.9 billion, the Environmental Protection Authority (EPA) has disclosed.

The economic cost is equivalent to about 2.3% of Ghana’s Gross Domestic Product (GDP), according to the Investment Case for Improved Ambient Air Quality and Health in Ghana Report 2025 by the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP).

The EPA said major sources of air pollution in the country include vehicle emissions, industrial and commercial activities, the use of firewood and charcoal for cooking and the open burning of waste.

“Air pollution remains a major threat to human health and the environment,” the EPA said in a statement issued on Monday, September 7, to mark the International Day of Clean Air for Blue Skies 2026.

This year’s commemoration is being held under the theme, “Clean Air, Healthy Choices: Acting Together for People and Planet”.

The Authority said air pollution is also a major global health threat, citing the State of Global Air Report 2025, which identified it as the second-leading risk factor for premature death worldwide. The report estimates that air pollution contributed to approximately 7.9 million deaths globally in 2023.

The EPA said it is implementing several measures to improve air quality in Ghana.

These include monitoring air quality at designated locations and enforcing the Environmental Protection (Air Quality Management) Regulations, 2025 (LI 2507) to control emissions. The Authority is also collaborating with the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority (DVLA) to introduce vehicle emissions testing as part of the roadworthiness certification process.

‘WhatsApp grammar, poor reading habit caused decline in 2026 WASSCE English results’ – WAEC

The West African Examinations Council (WAEC) has attributed the decline in English Language performance in the 2026 WASSCE to poor reading habits, grammatical weaknesses and the growing use of informal language on social media, particularly WhatsApp by candidates.

Head of Public Affairs at WAEC, John Kapi, said although candidates generally performed better this year than in 2025, English Language recorded a decline.

“The results have been an improvement on the previous year’s performance except for English Language, which saw a decline,” he said in an interview with Citi News.

The proportion of candidates obtaining A1 to C6 in English fell from 73.11 per cent in 2023 to 69.52 per cent in 2024, 69 per cent in 2025 and 62.40 per cent in 2026.

Mr. Kapi said the Chief Examiner’s report identified persistent weaknesses in concord, spelling, grammar, comprehension and summary writing.

He also expressed concern about declining reading habits, noting that some candidates struggled to answer questions based on prescribed literary texts. WAEC is additionally worried about informal language creeping into examination scripts.

“They might only use the contracted forms as if they were the standard, and that is one area that is worrying,” Kapi said.

In Core Mathematics, however, WAEC recorded an improvement compared with 2025. John Kapi said candidates demonstrated strengths in arithmetic progression, coordinate geometry and business mathematics, although weaknesses remained in translating word problems into mathematical statements and other areas.

In 2026, 60.75 per cent of candidates obtained A1 to C6 in Core Mathematics, while English recorded 62.40 per cent.

Failure to jail corrupt NPP officials will haunt NDC in election 2028 – Hopson Adorye warns

Director of Field Operations for the United Party (UP), Hopson Adorye, has warned the National Democratic Congress (NDC) that Ghanaians will not forgive the party if it fails to prosecute and jail officials of the New Patriotic Party (NPP) found culpable of corruption.

According to him, the NDC secured massive support from Ghanaians partly because of its promise to tackle corruption and hold persons accused of wrongdoing under the previous NPP administration accountable.

Speaking to Kwabena Bobie Ansah on the Citizen Show on Accra 100.5 FM, Mr Adorye said the NDC could not afford to disappoint Ghanaians in its handling of corruption-related matters.

He argued that expectations among the public remain high, particularly regarding investigations and prosecutions involving former government officials and appointees accused of corruption.

Mr Adorye maintained that where investigations establish wrongdoing, the appropriate legal processes must be allowed to take their course to ensure that persons found culpable are held accountable. He cautioned the NDC against what he described as a failure to act on its campaign commitments, warning that such an approach could have serious political consequences for the party.

According to him, Ghanaians who voted massively for the NDC expect the government to demonstrate its commitment to fighting corruption by ensuring that alleged corrupt acts are thoroughly investigated and prosecuted where the evidence supports such action.

He further warned that if the NDC fails to deal decisively with corruption allegations involving members of the previous NPP administration, the consequences could eventually affect the party itself.

Mr Adorye claimed that the NPP could seek similar treatment against NDC officials if it returns to power in the future.

He therefore urged the NDC government to remain firm in its fight against corruption and ensure that accountability is pursued through due process and the courts.

He stressed that the credibility of the government’s anti-corruption agenda would depend largely on its ability to translate its promises into concrete action.

NPP’s failure to continue E-blocks projects worsened SHS placement crisis – Tanko Computer

The Chief Executive Officer of the Ghana Investment Fund for Electronic Communications (GIFEC), Rashid Tanko Computer, has blamed the failure of the previous New Patriotic Party (NPP) administration to continue the construction of community-based E-block schools for some of the access challenges associated with the Computerized School Placement System.

He said the introduction of the Free Senior High School (Free SHS) programme increased pressure on existing school infrastructure, making investment in additional facilities critical to absorbing the growing number of students.

Tanko Computer made the remarks on TV3’s New Day on Tuesday, September 8, while reacting to recent challenges associated with the Computerized School Placement System.

“When they rolled out the Free SHS system, we told them about infrastructure access. You see, access is key because if you look at population, the number of students being churned out from the basic schools that move to the upper basic, which is the JHS system, from there to move to the SHS, you are going to have an explosion,” he said.

According to him, the E-block initiative was introduced to bridge the infrastructure gap and expand access to secondary education, particularly in areas where existing schools were insufficient.

He argued that the failure to continue the project over the past eight years had denied the country additional school infrastructure that could have helped ease pressure on the placement system.

The GIFEC CEO also defended the decision to locate some E-blocks away from densely populated communities, explaining that the intention was to open up new areas for development rather than concentrate schools in already congested urban centres.

“If they[NPP] had done something about it, I’m sure it would have helped the issue of accessibility,” said the NDC stalwart.

Even dog would win Karaga seat from Dr. Amin Adam for NDC in 2028 – Former MP

Former Karaga Member of Parliament (MP) for Karaga Constituency, Alhassan Sualihu Dandaawa, has said the National Democratic Congress (NDC) will reclaim the Karaga seat from the New Patriotic Party (NPP) in the 2028 general election.

“With the kind of work President John Mahama has done in Karaga, even if we present a dog as our candidate, it will win the 2028 general election,” he said. He noted that the President has empowered the NDC leadership across various sectors ahead of the 2028 polls.

“John Mahama has empowered us in various sectors, and we are ready to take back the seat from the NPP,” the Deputy Administrator of the Ghana Education Trust Fund (GETFund) said while addressing party supporters.

Dandaawa insisted the Karaga seat rightfully belongs to the NDC, not the NPP.

“We will let [Dr. Mohammed Amin Adam] know that the Karaga seat belongs to the NDC and not the NPP,” he said.

The former MP urged residents to vote massively for the NDC, assuring them the party will bring more development to the area.

“Expect more projects from the NDC for the development of Karaga, and before the end of John Mahama’s tenure, Karaga will be developed massively,” he stated.

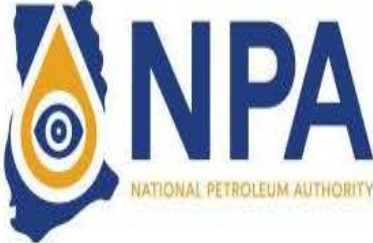

Mr. Dandaawa made the remarks while donating a Toyota Voxy to the NDC constituency chairman for Karaga, in recognition of his dedication, sacrifice, and commitment to the party’s growth and success in the constituency.

Free-agent Jordan Ayew joins Sheffield United on one-year deal Ghana captain Jordan Ayew has joined Championship side Sheffield United on a one-year contract following the expiration of his deal with Leicester City.

The 34-year-old forward arrives at Bramall Lane as a free agent and becomes the final addition to Chris Wilder's 25-man squad for the season.

Ayew's move comes just months after captaining Ghana at the 2026 FIFA World Cup, where he started all four matches as the Black Stars progressed to the knockout stages, including a goalless draw against England.

Sheffield United manager Chris Wilder welcomed the signing, revealing the club moved swiftly to secure the experienced attacker.

"I spoke last week about being close to getting someone in from the free agent market, and things did move quite quickly, so I am really pleased to have Jordan with us," Wilder said.

The Blades boss highlighted Ayew's wealth of experience and versatility across the forward line.

"We're talking about someone here with bags of experience from right at the top level of the game. Only a few months ago he was captaining Ghana in the World Cup, so he's someone with real pedigree."

"He did well at this level last season in difficult circumstances and has played all across the front positions during his career, which gives us plenty of options."

Ayew arrives with more than 500 senior appearances to his name, having featured for clubs including Marseille, Sochaux, Lorient, Aston Villa, Swansea City, Crystal Palace and Leicester City.

The Ghana international will now look to add further experience and attacking quality to Wilder's side as Sheffield United target a strong Championship campaign.

Ghana captain Jordan Ayew

'I am confident Jordan Ayew will make an impact' - Sheffield United coach

Sheffield United manager Chris Wilder believes Jordan Ayew has the experience and versatility to make an immediate impact after the Ghana captain completed his move to the Championship club.

The 34-year-old forward has signed a one-year contract with the Blades as a free agent after leaving Leicester City at the end of last season.

Wilder said the deal came together quickly and believes Ayew's pedigree will strengthen his squad as they target promotion.

"I spoke last week about being close to getting someone in from the free agent market, and things did move quite quickly, so I am really pleased to have Jordan with us," he told the club's media.

"We're talking about someone here with bags of experience from right at the top level of the game. Only a few months ago he was captaining Ghana in the World Cup, so he's someone with real pedigree."

Ayew's ability to operate across the front line was another key factor behind the move, according to Wilder.

"He did well at this level last season in difficult circumstances and has played all across the front positions during his career, which gives us plenty of options."

Wilder also pointed to the club's recent success in the free-agent market, adding that he expects Ayew to make a similar contribution to experienced arrivals Patrick Bamford and Jairo Riedewald.

With more than 500 senior appearances to his name,

Ayew brings a wealth of experience to Sheffield United as they seek a return to the Premier League.

Samuel Osei Kuffour bets $5,000 on Asante Kotoko to win 2026/27 Ghana Premier League title

Former Ghana defender Samuel Osei Kuffour has backed Asante Kotoko to win the 2026/27 Ghana Premier League title, putting $5,000 on his prediction.

The former Bayern Munich and AS Roma centre-back made the bold claim while speaking to football fans after a ‘Monday Stars’ game in Accra.

Asked which team he expects to be crowned champions, Kuffour confidently replied: “Asante Kotoko will win the league.”

Some fans challenged the former Ghana international to put money behind his prediction, initially proposing a GHS 10,000 bet.

Kuffour, however, raised the stakes.

“Let’s make it $5,000. I guarantee you Kotoko will win the league,” he said.

The UEFA Champions League winner’s confidence comes despite Kotoko dropping points on the opening weekend of the season.

The Porcupine Warriors were held to a 2-2 draw by Ghana Premier League debutants Debibi United at the Golden City Park in Berekum.

Kotoko will be looking for their first victory of the campaign when they host Heart of Lions at the Baba Yara Stadium on Sunday in their Matchday 2 fixture.

Kuffour, who also played for King Faisal during his career in Ghana, remains one of the country’s most decorated footballers after winning the Champions League with Bayern Munich in 2001.

‘Don’t twist my words to mean what they don’t’ – Sarkodie warns Stonebwoy Ghanaian rapper Michael Owusu Addo, known as Sarkodie, has responded to comments by fellow artiste Stonebwoy in their ongoing exchange over principles, industry relationships and the conduct of artistes.

Sarkodie accused Stonebwoy of misrepresenting his earlier comments and creating an impression that he had advised artistes to compromise their principles for personal gain.

His response follows a post by Stonebwoy on Tuesday, September 8, in which the dancehall artiste challenged Sarkodie to reconcile his call for artistes to avoid toxic energy with what he described as his own conduct.

“There’s no need to say something I never said that artistes should play along so far as it benefits them,” Sarkodie wrote in a social media post on the same day. Sarkodie explained that his original post, made on Monday, was directed at artistes who entertain fans who attack other brands to elevate them.

He said he had no intention of shading Stonebwoy and questioned why the dancehall artiste had connected the post to himself.

According to Sarkodie, he does not ordinarily respond to interpretations created by fans because he is more concerned about the opinions of the people directly involved. He said he only chose to respond to Stonebwoy because the criticism came directly from him.

Sarkodie also referred to their phone conversation, saying he had told Stonebwoy that he did not have to forgive or forget people if he did not want to, but could not control how others chose to handle their own situations.

He maintained that the two artistes could either work together towards a common goal or go their separate ways without harbouring unnecessary resentment.

Sarkodie further pointed to their history, saying he had personally reached out to Stonebwoy on several occasions, including inviting him to his RAH show and supporting his career milestones.

‘You can’t preach principle without standing by it’ – Stonebwoy tells Sarkodie Dancehall artiste Stonebwoy has responded to rapper Sarkodie’s call for artistes to avoid entertaining toxic energy from fans seeking to elevate one artiste by attacking another.

The comments come after Sarkodie, in a social media post on Monday, September 7, cautioned artistes against entertaining fans who attack other brands in an attempt to elevate them.

Sarkodie said artistes should be wary of people who appear to be defending them but are instead seeking engagement for their own personal gain.

In a social media post on Tuesday, Stonebwoy said his response was based on recent interactions between the two artistes and what he described as Sarkodie’s conduct in two social media posts.

“You were very clear about how no artiste could be ‘forced’ to uphold any form of principle. That, literally, in our industry, artistes must play along so far as it benefits them, and it cannot matter how, because we all care about different things,” Stonebwoy recounted from his conversation with Sarkodie.

Stonebwoy said he called Sarkodie after his RAH show in the United Kingdom to congratulate him, with the two speaking for more than 10 minutes.

He also recounted an interaction following his OVO show, saying Sarkodie posted cryptic video on social media, prompting him to question the message behind it.

According to Stonebwoy, he subsequently sent Sarkodie a message after making what he described as a factual tweet, following which Sarkodie called him back.

Although he initially missed the call, Stonebwoy said he returned it and the two artistes spoke for more than an hour about the music industry, artistes’ behaviour and their different perspectives.

“Standing on just these 2 videos for now, I believe this tweet of yours has been equally considered. And you will agree that without PRINCIPLE, advice is an OPINION,” he stressed.

Marriage can be war but patience is very important – Selina Boateng Gospel musician, Selina Boateng, has shared lessons from her six-year marriage, outlining three things she would do differently and advise people preparing to get married again.

Speaking in an interview on Angel FM, the “Nyame Bohye” hitmaker said patience is one of the most important qualities needed in marriage.

“If I am to advise individuals getting into a new marriage, I would tell them that patience is very important because when you get there, it can be war. I’m not saying this to scare anyone, but I’m speaking from what I know and what I have experienced,” she said.

Selina explained that many people are drawn to the glamorous side of marriage, including elaborate weddings, without adequately preparing for the challenges of married life.

She described marriage as “extremely rough” and said it takes wisdom and understanding to navigate its difficulties.

The gospel musician also called for continuous counselling for couples, rather than limiting premarital counselling to a specific period.

“If I had my way, counselling would not be limited to just six months. It should be a continuous process because marriage is like school. You never really finish learning; at every stage, there is something new to learn,” she stated.

As her third piece of advice, Selina urged people preparing for marriage to be God-fearing and cautioned against allowing peer pressure to influence their decision.

She said people should not rush into marriage simply because they feel they are getting older or believe they need to settle down quickly.

Selina confirmed in 2025 that her six-year marriage to Isaac Berchie, whom she married on December 7, 2019, had ended.

Despite the divorce, she said she feels no shame about her marital status and has not experienced stigma following the end of the marriage.
